August days among the stay-at-homes. It is fortunate that St. Louis is abundantly supplied with natatoriums, else society would not be able to indulge in the sport to such a marked degree, the river not being exactly available for bathing this side of Clifton Terrace and the Hillni Yacht

Almost every evening for the last month parties of young people, chaperoned by on obliging matron who does not mind sacrificing a few hours to lend dignity to the affair, have wended their way to the various pools, where, clad in natty bathing sults, they have disported until the hour waxed late and the vigorous exercise brought about a desire for food. Supper at the downtown cafes has been a popular mode of finishing the evening, with, of course, private parties at such of the residences as are not closed for the summer.

Miss Grace Frank is one of the most ardent baseball fans in town among the young women who enjoy the national game. Almost every afternoon when the team is bome she is to be found occurving a cool position in the grand stand, usually accompanied by her brother and sometimes with a merry party of congenial friends Once in awhile she even goes alone, so cager is she not to miss a game.

One of Miss Frank's most cherished desires is to obtain a league ball. All season long she has watched and waited for ; foul to come her way into the grand stand and all season long has she been steadily disappointed. So anxious has she been to gain the coveted trophy that alm st every afternoon she has taken her seat in a dif-ferent part of the grand stand, with the vain hope that a ball might be fouled in her lirection. Once she even petitioned he brother to take her over into the left "bleachers," that region of the hol-polloi known as "Goose Hill"—that bourne from which no foul ball ever returneth. Up to last Thursday afternoon Miss Frank's efforts have been absolutely with-out results. Change her seat as often as she might, no fouls ever came her way.

She grew despondent, but still persevered.

On the afternoon above-mentioned the young woman went out alone and took her position in the extreme right section of the grand stand down near the front, where there seemed to be more breeze than in any other part of the place. Soon becoming absorbed in the game, she forgot the extreme heat of the afternoon, and even forgot to watch for stray fouls. She took off her cherry-laden sailor hat, and gave herself up to pure and simple pleasure.

Whiz came a ball through the air, struck by one of the Brooklyn batsmen. Miss Frank watched it sail along toward the grand stand for fully half a second before she woke up to the fact that it was coming straight her way.

Then she grew excited.

Half rising from her seat she saw it, fascinated, coming nearer and nearer until, with a resounding that it decreased debt. she might, no fouls ever came her way,

Then she grew excited.

Haif rising from her seat she saw it, fascinated, coming nearer and nearer until, with a resounding thud, it dropped right at her feet within the railing.

Quickly spreading her skirt over it, she feigned as unconscious an air as possible and sat perfectly motionless.

Several meh in her vicinity saw where the ball had dropped, but thinking that she had designs on it, never made a move to betray her. Her heart was thumping like mad, but she outwardly betrayed no sign, with the precious ball safely covered up under befulled flounces and white pique.

The gentleman in the gray clothes down on the bench tossed out a red paper-covered object with sharp corners. Miss. Frank drew a long breath. Her beloved ball was safe and all her own!

Then—ah, fatal moment!—there appeared a bronzed head just above the railing in front of her. The head of one Patsey Donovan, whose especial stunt it is to look out for balls in that region. Two equally bronzed hands supported the head; sind a deep volce said in peremptory tones:

"Will you kindly hand over that ball?"

"And if you will believe me, I was so frightened that I just passed it right out to him without another move." natherically

"And if you will believe me, I was so frightened that I just passed it right out to him without another move," pathetically declares Miss Frank when she tells the story. "Wasn't it a perfect calamity that, after waiting all summer for that hall, I should have to give it up before I'd even squeezed the leather?"

And the really meleanabeles. squeezed the leather?"
And the really melancholoy part of the whole story is, that the gallant Mr. Donovan had not the silghtest suspicion where that foul ball had struck; and would doubtless have been only too pleased to have allowed it to remain in its hiding place, had he known the depth of Miss Frank's desire to own a League ball.

Entertainment for Sunday School a New Feature.

The Levee Mission Sunday School held an entertainment from 5 to 7 p. m. yesterday, consisting of musical and literary selections, and at the close ice cream and cake were served to the little ones.

In the early part of January the Reverend and Mrs. A. Lichtenstein, who had been connected with mission work in New York and other Eastern cities for many years, and who had also been connected with several missions in St. Louis, including a Jewish mission, conceived the idea of opening a mission rescue home for the men in the lower part of the city. After conferring with the business men and others they rented the building at No. 9 North Levee, and in this way the work was started. The two upper floors of this building are arranged for sleeping quarters, and the lower floor is used for religious purposes as well as a sitting-room. During the winter months a religious service is held every evening, after which soup or coffee is served gratis to all present. Five cents is charged for lodging, and in this may the mission is made almost self-supporting. Alton, Ill., Aug. 11.—Miss Edith Brenholt svisiting at Chautauqua.

A Wrinkled Old "Match Woman" Who Has a Soul Above the Wares She Sells.

HAS BEEN DISCOVERED.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Atlanta, Ga., Aug. II.-Almost every Atlantian knows Rowena R. Peyton, the old "match woman," who has been one of the most interesting characters of this city for years. No one would have guessed that the soul of the wrinkled old woman glowed with poetry had she not confessed that she often indulged in a bit of verse, and to prove this gave the following as an example. She this gave the following as an example. She declares that she has written a good many better than this, but she likes the theme of this one, and so gave it for publica-

Judge McEntire Refuses to Allow His Release.

John Thomas Brady, who shot and killed James Sprouel, the negro porter in Pat Manley's saloon at Twenty-first and Chestnut streets, a week ago, was refused ball by Provisional Judge McEntire of the Court of Criminal Correction yesterday. Brady's attorneys argued at length that Brady shot in self-defense, and should be allowed bond. Judge McEntire decided, after looking up the law in the case, that bond could not be taken in capital punishment cases.

"If, at the preliminary hearing," he said, "there is evidence which tends to show that it was not a murder, bond can be furnished, but until the preliminary hearing Brady will be held in confinement."
